Zara department store near me

Many visitors to London are looking forward to getting acquainted with the offers of famous department stores. London department stores are usually part of the retail chain, but most of them have their flagship stores right in central London, making it convenient for visitors. These affluent department stores offer one-stop shopping and include places to relax and drink tea or eat at their restaurants, cafes and bars. Some even have spas and beauty salons where you can relax at the end of a difficult day of shopping. Personal shoppers can be booked if you need retail help that adds to the convenience. Large department stores offer a good after-sale service too, so you can feel confident shopping from these stores and delivering or taking your shopping home with you. 01 of Sean Egan's 11/Getty Images Harrods opened in 1849 and has a reputation for excellence, selling the best quality goods. London landmark everyone wants to visit, Harrods has over 300 departments on seven floors, so it's easy to spend a lot of time and money here, even while the store continues its upgrade and renovation-Harrods just re-launched its beauty hall after a long renovation process. Don't miss the impressive food hall, one of the 30 eateries in the store selling everything from fresh doughnuts and sushi to delicacies, perfect for gifts. Harrods is easily accessible from Knightsbridge Tube station on the Piccadilly line. 02 of the 11 Tristan Fewings/Getty Images Selfridges opened on Oxford Street in 1909 and underwent major renovations in the 1990s. The flagship store on Oxford Street in London is the second largest department store in the UK and is now a stunning, modern store that attracts top-end shoppers looking for designer goods. You can take an art tour of the art collection at Selfridges and, when you need a break, stay at any number of restaurants and bars, including an ice cream shop and a bubble tea bar. Selfridges is accessible from Bond Street Tube Station. 03 of 11 Oli Scarff/Getty Images John Lewis opened his first store on Oxford Street in 1864, selling haberdashery before expanding to the current building in 1870. John Lewis is known for its spicy pricing (never consciously undersold is his mantra) and they stock almost half a million products from perfumes for luggage and toys on TVs. The store on Oxford Street was renovated in 2001 and a basement food hall was added in 2007. There are several restaurants to choose from. Services include interior design, personal purchases, and children's specialty services. Peter Jones at Sloane Square, Chelsea, is part of the same group. The store on Oxford Street is closest to Oxford Street Tube station. 04 of 11 Tim Graham/WireImage/Getty Images Fortnum and Mason have been at 181 Piccadilly for over 300 The store is popular with members of the British royal family and is famous for its fine food. Fortnum's food hall expanded into two floors, and fresher food than ever before. Fortnum and Mason is the quintessential English that attracts many overseas visitors to the ground floor. Venture outside the food department and you will find men's clothing, women's clothing, cosmetics, utensils and luggage spread over many floors. Fortnum and Mason is home to four Welsh bee hives housed on the roof of a Piccadilly shop since 2008. These are special hives six feet high, with artist-designed entrances in iconic architectural styles such as Roman, Chinese and Gothic with copper pagoda roofs. Their honey jars, which make great souvenirs, are modeled after these impressive hives. Picadilly Circus is a two-minute walk from the store. There are eight floors of fashion, beauty and home collections, and the fifth floor is dedicated to food and restaurants. Harvey Nik's is a hipper than Harrods, and some say he has a wider choice of designer than Selfridges. A trip here is a must for any fashionista. The nearest metro station to Harvey Nichols is Knightsbridge. 06 of 11 Leon Neal/Staff/Getty Images There are branches of House of Fraser (HOF) across the UK and the store advertises being a high-end place for trendy designer goods. It is a popular store and has a great home brand called Linea. In 2018, HOF owners entered into a voluntary agreement that included plans to close more than half of House of Fraser stores and then were acquired by Mike Ashley of Sports Direct International (SDI) with plans to revitalize the business and keep most of the stores open. The nearest metro stop is Bond Street Station. 07 of 11 Leon Neal/Staff/Getty Images Debenhams has a history back in 1778 when William Clark opened a drapery shop in London's West End selling expensive fabrics, hats, gloves and umbrellas. In 1813, William Debenham became a partner in the company, and he became Clark and Debenham. The store, with several branches in Ireland, the UK and around the world is now known as a general department store service. Debenhams stock available ranges from a number of talented British designers such as Jasper Conran, Ben de Lisi, and Julien Macdonald. Debenhams has a great shoe department, an extensive lingerie section, and a cosmetics room with all the top beauty brands represented. Bond Street Tube station is the nearest. 08 of 11 Jack Taylor/Stringer/Getty Images Arthur Lasenby opened Liberty in 1875 and the iconic Tudor-style building was designed in the 1920s. Arthur traveled the world importing exotic goods from remote destinations, and his support for the arts and crafts movement helped create what is known worldwide as the Style of Liberty. The building is now a heritage-listed London They have an in-house design studio that has handmade paint and creates prints from the store's archives. You'll find home decor, decor, and high-quality accessories and gifts. This elegant store is unlike any other as it feels like you are in a luxury home rather than a shop, so it's definitely worth a visit. The nearest metro stop for Liberty London is Oxford Circus. Continue to 9 of 11 below. 09 of 11 Jack Taylor/Stringer/Getty Images Marks and Spencer Marble Arch is the flagship store for Mark and Sparks, which is probably The UK's most beloved department store (there is another branch at 173 Oxford Street). Londoners buy their underwear there, but they also have a wonderful assortment of clothes that is known for its good quality and reasonable prices. The Marble Arch branch is always popular with foreign visitors who seem to come to buy clothes for a whole year. Marks and Spencer food halls are as great as the prices are kind to the wallet, so you can treat yourself to some lovely picnic food. The Marble Arch metro station is closest to Marks and Spencer. 10 out of 11 In 1891, Fenwick opened on New Bond Street, which today is one of London's trendiest outlets. Fenwick of Bond Street consists of five floors of fashionable clothing and accessories for men and women, as well as underwear and home collections. The cosmetics department is considered one of the best in London and Fenwick Kitchen on the second floor is a great place to enjoy afternoon tea or modern British food with wine. Oxford Circus or Bond Street metro stations are the same equivalent from the store. 11 of 11 David M. Benett/Author/Getty Images Dover Street Market (DSM London) is the brainchild of Commes des Garcon founder, Rey Kawakubo, and he has over 50 designers in a six-historical Georgian-fronted building in Mayfair. It has an industrial atmosphere with paint splattered concrete floors and stairs and portable toilet locker rooms. It is considered a hip place to shop and be seen shopping. DSM seems to be the most popular among Japanese visitors. The Rose Bakery on the top floor serves delicious treats. Picadilly Circus is the closest metro station. For several days, employees at the Marshalls store in Longmont, Washington, heard what sounded like screaming from behind the walls. Was it a ghost? Maybe a problem with pipes? Not exactly. RELATED: Creepy Dashcam Footage will give you chills in what must be an eerie experience in itself, they have finally discovered the source of the racket: a man screaming through a hole in the wall. The man was 35-year-old Paul Felik, who was trapped between the walls after falling 20 feet. Authorities immediately arrived at the scene earlier this week and released him using a circular saw, according to the Longmont Times-Call. It is estimated that Felik was trapped for at least three days, and it was similar to the distress notes that were found with him. They were hard to read, but they definitely said: Police Sgt. Matt Cage said. RELATED: Men steal beer at the worst Getaway Ever Felyk, finally free after about half an hour cutting through the building, and was taken to a local His current condition is unknown. Police are investigating the possibility of burglary or infiltration. They are also looking for a link between the incident and complaints received by nearby businesses that have problems with their heating and electricity systems. ANSWER: 10 real-life law and order Felique was not charged with any crimes, but he entered the building through the roof and was previously convicted of robbery, penetration, assault, driving while capable of misconduct, theft and criminal misconduct. In fact, he wrote one of his requests for help on his probation officer's business card.
